

#InternetFreedom

Democracy and human rights activists who are proponents of political, social, and economic reform utilize the internet as a way to express themselves and share ideas. Countries such as China, North Korea, Cuba, and India have censored their internet to restrict citizens from getting "ideas" and rebelling against the government. This particular practice is prominent in authoritarian and repressive regimes. Hence why net neutrality is prevalent among citizens because it does not censor any of the information they would be able to find on the internet.

